

Carrick-on-Suir

Carrick-on-Suir is a beautiful and historic town where the Butler Family grew to power. The Butlers first settled here in the 13th century. Thomas 'Black Tom' Butler, 10th Earl of Ormond (1532-1614) was the most colourful and influential family member who lived here.

Black Tom built a fine manor house as part of Ormond Castle in the 1560s in expectation of a visit from his cousin Elizabeth I, daughter of Henry VIII and Ann Boleyn. Unfortunately Elizabeth never visited at all. Find out more about their much-talked-about relationship on a tour of Ormond Castle, Ireland's only surviving unfortified Tudor Manor House which contains beautiful details including decorative plasterwork portraits of Elizabeth I. Admission to the Tudor Manor House and local Heritage Centre is free.

Explore Carrick-on-Suir's other rich cultural and sporting heritage on its historic town trail. Learn more about its famous sons including the former World Champion cyclist Sean Kelly, Irish folk music singers The Clancy Brothers, and the GAA's first President, Maurice Davin. Clonmel

Nestled in the valley of the River Suir, Clonmel is a thriving and bustling town. Once the administrative centre of the Butlers, Clonmel today is the county town of South Tipperary. James Butler, the 12th Earl and 1st Duke of Ormond (1610-88), was a grandnephew of Black Tom. James was arguably the Butlers' most important family member, being the most influential Butler in Ireland's history.

James built the Main Guard in Clonmel in 1675 and King James II visited in 1689. Visit the Main Guard to learn more about James' influence on Clonmel, his role in the English Court and his lasting legacy in Ireland.

Clonmel is steeped in a hidden history which is waiting to be explored, including the site of the famous Cromwellian siege, its town walls and the county museum. Cahir

Cahir, a romantic and charming small town, grew up around Cahir Castle which was originally a fort built on a rock in the River Suir. The town became a stronghold of the Butler family. The Manor of Cahir was granted to James Butler, 3rd Earl of Ormond in 1375, and afterwards to his son, James Gallda, ancestor of the Cahir Butlers.

Cahir Castle is one of Ireland's largest and best-preserved castles. It was famously besieged by the Earl of Essex in 1599. A cannonball can still be seen in one of the walls. It remained under the ownership of the Butlers until 1961. A visit is a must. The castle has featured in many films and TV programmes, including Excalibur and The Tudors television series. Under Richard Butler, 1st Earl of Glengall (1775-1819), and his wife, Cahir became a fashionable place for gentry. In the early 1800s he built the delightful Swiss Cottage, a cottage orné designed by John Nash and the finest eco building of its time. Cahir House, now a hotel, was the town house of the Butlers from the 1770s.

Cahir is now a picturesque and vibrant town, with pleasant streetscapes and beautiful riverside walks. You can sit in the square and enjoy a coffee or browse a wonderful selection of regional crafts at the Craft Granary. Cahir is a centre of excellence for brown trout fishing and the nearby mountains provide endless opportunities for relaxing scenic drives, horse riding or walking.

The Butler Family History

Thebold Fitzwater arrived in Ireland with Prince John in 1185 and was granted over 400,000 acres of land in Tipperary. As Chief Butler to Prince John he was entitled to 10% of all wine cargoes and it is from this important role that his family took the name Butler from the early 1200s. For much of the 1300s the Butlers' main residence was in Carrick-on-Suir. It moved to Kilkenny Castle in 1391. From the 13th until the 18th century the Butlers were one of the most powerful families in Ireland and held many important offices.

Anne Boleyn, mother of Queen Elizabeth I, for whom Black Tom Butler built the beautiful Manor House, was great granddaughter of the 7th Earl of Ormond. Queen Elizabeth I, the Virgin Queen, referred to Black Tom as her black husband – reputedly referring to his dark eyes. Experience this compelling slice of history on the Butler Trail.
